OUR NEW CITY HALL.

Steam_The Vaults_Other Work, The work on the boller-room now under construction on the east side of the new City Hall building is progressing steadily. The concrete foundation for the boilers has been laid and the latter, four in number, have been here for several days. Messrs. Brommell, Schmidt & Co., of York, Pa., who received the contract for the furnishing of the bollers, will send some of their men here within a day or two to put the boilers in their proper positions. then take about ten more days to brick them up, whereupon they can be tested and imnediately brought in proper connection with the new City Hall.

As soon as this has been done the steam heating apparatus will be put in place in the latter building, so that the building may be heated when the cold season sets in, in order that the work on the different floors may not suffer any interruption. The Introduction of the steam heating apparatus having been completed workmen can at once begin with the hard-wood finish of the interior. The latter work is to be done by day labor, while the steam heating will be introduced by contract.

The doors for the several vaults were delivered by the York Safe and Lock Company some time ago, and have been tempo-rarily stored in the shed on the north side of the building, until the plastering of the interior is completed. The doors are beautifully finished and are specimens of the most perfect work of that kind. Mr. Calder, the superintendent of the iron work in the City Hall, went to York, Pa., sevweeks ago and subjected the doors at the factory to the most severe test, which gave entire satisfaction. An expert from New York, who was present at the time, stated that he never before had seen that kind of work so severely tested.

At the Theatre.

There were few seats unoccupied at the Richmond Theatre last evening. That sprightly and dailty actress, Vernona Jarbeau, was the star, and the play was "Starlight." It's a good play, with little Staright. It's a good play, with fitter plot, but there are some of the most amusing scenes ever bobbing up in the acts, and the audience laughed until their sides ached. The company is excellent, the comedians good, the girls possess pretty figures, the costumes are new and laughtful and taken are whele the perbeautiful, and, taken as a whole, the per-formance is one of the prettiest, most en-joyable and daintiest that has been here for some time past. NERVOUS THACKERAY,

An Amusing Anecdote of the Great Author. Unwritten Memoirs.

Mrs. Richmond Ritchie's chapter of "Some Unwritten Memoirse" in Macmillan's Magazine, is as fascinating as ever for the glimpses it gives us of Thackeray.

Mrs. Kemble's little account of how the great novelist deported binnelf when about to deliver the first of his lectures on the English humorists, in Willest Rooms, shows what an ordeal it must have been. He was nervous to a degree.

Mrs. Kemble went on to the platform to obtain his manuscript for him, and to her horrer she scattered all the loose leaves about the boards. Let us take up the tale in her own words; "I hardly know what I did, but I think I must have gone nearly all fours in my agony to gather up the attered leaves, and, retreating with them, eld them out in dismay to poor Thackeray, rying, 'Oh, look! Look what a dreadful

You doubtless recall our "Remnant Occasions" with a good deal of pleasure, because they have assisted you materially in reducing your necessary expenses.
We clear up the departments again today. All "Remnants" at greatly reduced prices. Often, however, there is no apparent reason why we should reduce the price of some. Take the DRESS GOODS, for instance. Useful lengths of the season's best fabrics are offered you away under regular prices, although they are just as desirable as the goods in the piece. We reduce the price solely to prevent them accumulating and clogging the stock. Just so with many other stocks; the goods are not damaged, but being "short lengths," "odd and extreme sizes," "broken lines," &c., they come under the head of "Remnants," and everything of that character is given a price that will sell it immediately. Whenever goods are imperfect, soiled or otherwise damaged we tell you so.
